

I am deeply concerned about the current stories circulating in the news about a "documentary" to be aired by Sinclair Broadcasting. From what I hear this is possibly a one-sided, politically motivated presentation. It may even qualify as campaign material for the Bush re-election. However, I have not seen the piece and therefore cannot pass judgement. Instead I want to relay my concerns to you and encourage you to look closely at this action by Sinclair. If you should judge that it is not a balanced journalistic presentation I encourage you to enforce the laws protecting the American people's ownership of the airwaves. If you deem the piece to be in violation of the FCC requirements that licensed stations provide equal time to political campaigns, please take the necessary corrective action, before the show is aired. It is my understanding that, unlike the film "Fahrenheit 911," presentations broadcast by licensed television stations have an obligation to remain neutral in political campaigns. If this is not the case, please inform me as to what the laws actually are. Thank you, David Sokal, a concerned American Citizen.
